Drawings

The drawings were received on January 2, 2008. These drawings are disapproved, since the direction of arrow 20 appears to be in the wrong direction. At stated at page 5 (lines 11-16) of Applicants' specification (emphasis in italics added):

After reading and/or writing of the data on the disk, the control unit applies a constant voltage to the DC motor 14 of the slide mechanism 6 during a fixed time period. The voltage is provided such that the gear wheel 13 is rotated in the direction indicated by arrow 20. As the gear rack 12 and the gear wheel 13 are in engagement, the pickup unit 4 mounted on the slide 8 is translated towards its home position.

However, as shown in Figure 2 of Applicants' drawings, the home position is depicted wherein the slide (8) is closest to the spindle motor such that engagement members (18) and (19) are proximate each other. This would require that the direction of arrow 20 be in a clockwise direction (in the context of Applicants' disclosure description), as opposed to the counterclockwise direction depicted in the Applicants' Replacement sheet filed on January 2, 2008.

As such, the Replacement drawing has been disapproved until a correct directional arrow (20) can be shown.
